Objectives of the course

This course should clarify issues related to anaemia, neutropenia, thrombocytopenia and thrombosis in the cancer patient, including older patients, and the optimal way of preventing or treating these problems, including a review of guidelines. It will also focus on aspects still unresolved in the treatment of cancer treatment-associated anaemia like management of iron.

All aspects will be discussed with participation from the audience, also using case studies. At the end of the course the participants should be able to better prescribe preventative or corrective actions in these areas for cancer patients, including older patients, and critically follow the development of this important field in the near future.
